Who Run The World?

Wednesday, February 28, 2018
Dear SAS Honors Program Students,

Girl power! We are marching into March, Women’s History month, and it’s time to celebrate all the women who take the lead, which is something Rutgers excels at. From Douglass Residential College to the Institute of Women’s Leadership, Rutgers focuses on fostering inclusive classroom environments and a community where anyone can reach the heights they aspire. Between all of these and the Honors Program, there are plenty of ways for you to find the tools to run the world any way you want. So pay attention to these events and opportunities that can help you.

Learn how you can be the best leader for your community with one of the many programs available through the Institute of Women’s Leadership, including the Leadership Scholars Program that can be used to fulfill your SAS Honors capstone requirement. If you just want to take over the world, the key lies in good communication skills. For anyone who wants to improve theirs, check out the Modern Language Info Open House or enroll in the summer institute in NYC to learn Latin or Ancient Greek. You’ll also need to understand the past, which you can do by examining the space where art and history overlap at the Soundscapes of Modernity Concert. Find out how to take the lead in the art world at The Creative Life of Douglass Panel. Fuel your revolution with baked goods from the Visions and Pathways bake sales, while also contributing to a charitable cause. If you have some self-doubt, learn how to fight low self-esteem by reading Amanda Siriram’s post on the SASHP blog.

No matter who you are, there are plenty of ways that you can take the lead in the Rutgers community. Just seize the opportunities before you and pretty soon, we’ll be raising a glass for all the Rutgers grads.

This goes out to all my girls,
Kim Peterman and Julianna Rossano
Student Directors of Honors Media

Show Your Pride!
If you are a member of the LGBTQ+ community or would like to connect with fellow allies, stop by the Center for Social Justice Education and LGBT Community located at 17 Bartlett Street (CAC). Find out more about their resources, at http://socialjustice.rutgers.edu/
Institute of Women’s Leadership Programs
APPLICATION DUE ON MARCH 1 !!!! Are you interested in women’s leadership? In finding mentors? In building communities? In creating change? Then be sure to look into one of the many programs offered by the Institute of Women’s Leadership for the summer and next year, including the summer internship program CLASP, the undergraduate mentorship program WINGS, and the two-year certificate-bearing Leadership Scholars Program (which can count as your SAS Honors capstone). Find out more at http://iwl.rutgers.edu.

Learn Latin or Ancient Greek This Summer!
Whether you’re just starting out or developing more advanced skills, you can spend your summer focusing on these languages at the Latin/Greek Institute. All programs run from June to August and are total-immersion, with classes at the CUNY Graduate Center in Midtown Manhattan. Learn more about basic and advanced programs here.
The Creative Life of Douglass

Want to be an artist? Come hear about different paths you could take from artists from the Rutgers community at this panel discussion hosted by the Douglass Residential College (DRC). Speakers from fields ranging from dance to theater to visual arts will share their stories. The panel will be held on Mar. 26 at 5PM-6PM at the Mabel Smith Douglass Room in Douglass Library.

Soundscapes of Modernity

Jewish inhabitants of Polish cities, like their counterparts elsewhere, responded to the challenges of modernity in diverse ways, which included reshaping the musical soundscapes of their communities. This concert presents music of Polish Jews that is little known to American audiences – choral pieces from 19th-century progressive (“Reform”) congregations, compositions associated with Jewish music societies, and avant-garde works by Jewish composers. Come enjoy on Monday, Mar. 5 at 7:30PM-9PM at Kirkpatrick Chapel.
Modern Language Info Open House

Learn about opportunities in Rutgers World Languages Program. Visit with language faculty to explore opportunities including internships, study abroad, and business and culture courses. There will be free refreshments! The event will be this Friday, Mar. 2 at 2-3 PM in the Honors College East Lounge.
